

23RD NAVAJO NATION COUNCIL OFFICE OF THE SPEAKER

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

June 29, 2018

MEDIA CONTACTS

Jared Touchin (928) 221-9253
Jolene Holgate (928) 380-4174
Crystalyne Curley (928) 286-7918
nnlb.communications@gmail.com

Delegate Amber Kanazbah Crotty encourages traditional healing at annual Women Are Sacred Conference

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. – On Thursday, Council Delegate Amber Kanazbah Crotty (Beclabito, Cove, Gadi’í’áhi/To’Koi, Red Valley, Tooh Haltsooi, Toadlena/Two Grey Hills, Tsé ałnáoz’t’í’í) provided a plenary address entitled “We Carry Our Medicine” at the annual Women Are Sacred Conference, which focused on the utilization of indigenous traditional knowledge and ceremony for violence prevention.

Photo: Council Delegate Amber Kanazbah Crotty provided a plenary address at the Women Are Sacred Conference on June 28, 2018 in Albuquerque, N.M.

According to the conference’s theme, “Resilience: Walking in Ancestral Footprints, Carrying Our Medicine,” it promoted the use of indigenous cultural awareness as a means to ending violence in Indian Country and implementing social change through traditional healing and medicines. The conference was provided by the National Indigenous Women’s Resource Center.

Delegate Crotty, who also serves as the chair for the Navajo Nation Sexual Assault Prevention Subcommittee, stressed the importance of prayer and cultural resilience as victim advocates, law enforcement, social workers, parents, and youth work to promote violence prevention.

“I think one of the things we need to take away is how powerful prayer and ceremony is, and to incorporate it into what we are doing in protecting our women and children. This is the time to go to an elder or community medicine person to ask these critical questions about protection of others and most importantly, to restore yourself, your family, and community,” said Delegate Crotty.

In addition to promoting healing for victims, Delegate Crotty added that it was important for individuals who work in challenging environments and cope with personal traumas or traumas of victims, to take care of themselves at an individual level so they may continue to fight “modern day monsters” such as violence, sexual assault, suicide, and alcohol and substance abuse.

The conference invited victim advocates, survivors of violence and abuse, tribal domestic and sexual violence programs, tribal leadership, community members, law enforcements, and tribal court officials and personnel. The conference is designed to provide training opportunities and aid in developing community-based programs to address violence in tribal communities.

At the conclusion of Delegate Crotty’s address, she thanked the participants and the organizers of the conference for providing valuable information to stakeholders dedicated to ending violence and protecting tribal communities, and commended the Native American youth who took part in the trainings and discussions.

“To the youth, you literally are the prayers your great-great-grandmothers put in place. She never knew your name, but she had that hope, perseverance, and tenacity to put your life into motion. How did she do that? Through prayer, through her own teachings—she survived. And that’s how we are all here today, through our women nation who provided life and our men nation who partner with us to create the beautiful blessings we see here,” said Delegate Crotty.

###

For news on the latest legislative branch activities, please visit www.navajonationcouncil.org or find us on Facebook and Twitter, keywords: Navajo Nation Council